Swish Swish

True Happiness on the Lower East Side

March 17th, 2003

If you don't have a great meal at Happy Shabu Shabu, it's your own fault—you do all the cooking at the city's latest outpost of Japanese nabemono, in which guests swish thin-sliced morsels of food in a bubbling pot. Traditionally limited to beef, shabu shabu became popular in the 19th century soon after the cow was introduced to Japan. Happy Shabu Shabu is not Japanese, however. It's a Chinese adaptation, shining like a beacon on the dark stretch of Canal Street east of the Manhattan Bridge. The interior is certainly happy, decorated with colorful polka dots, glassed-in dioramas crammed with dried flowers and stuffed animals, and a Herbie the Love Bug poster. The long tables are inset with individual radiant cooking stations, one for each diner.

While the Japanese original confines itself to beef, your choice of flesh is wide-ranging, also including pork, lamb, chicken, several kinds of fish, a diverse seafood combination, and a vegetarian selection. Ranging from $7.50 to $12.50, each choice features a towering plate of accessory swishables, including shiitake and enoki mushrooms, fish balls, watercress, napa cabbage, a raw egg, bean-thread vermicelli, sliced fish cake, tofu, to fu skin, taro, daikon, fermented cabbage, and a wedge of unripe tomato that should be discreetly disposed of. Help yourself to innumerable Chinese and Japanese flavorings at the condiment bar. As soon as you reseal yourself, a uniformed attendant appears with a giant silver teapot and pours broth into your personal cooking vessel. Locate the hidden control beneath the table and modulate it so that the stock achieves a slow boil. It's up to you to decide which condiments to dump into the bubbling liquid, and which to retain as dipping sauces.

As if this ingratiating plenitude weren't enough, add-ons are also available. Though you might choose to ignore them for purposes of economy, some are quite good, especially the three types of wonions (half-dozen, $3), the blue crab filled with orange roe ($3), the misnamed but pleasantly flavored tempura ($3), and cuttlefish ($5), which should be dipped in the water for only 30 seconds to reach maximum tenderness. Among main ingredients, the lamb has the most interesting flavor, while the pork retains the best texture after boiling. At Happy Shabu Shabu, every meal turns into a competition, as guests figure out things like what to do with the egg-crack it into a floating cabbage leaf and poach it? dribble it to make egg drops? Whoever ends up with the best soup wins.

If you don't have a great meal at Happy Shabu Shabu, it's your own fault . . .

Horu's "Jumbo", sushi "sake" raises this Japanese "empire" "a cut above" in the eyes of "youngish" fans who cheer the "sensational" food, "raw or cooked", that "won't bankrupt you"; though "loud, rushed" and prone to "peppin' waits, it's "no wonder" given the "all-sake" "quality."
